A Strong Sentiment in Favor of Having It in Washington Commander Lin coin Warmly Indorses the Suggestion - Other Grand Army Men

There is a movement on foot among the Grand Army men of Washington looking to the selection of this city as the site of the annual encampment to te held next year. The feeling has long been growing that the Capital, suitable for the meeting. There are already two rivals in the field pressing their claims upon the attention of the comrades. Indianapolis wants it and she wants it bad, to judge by the efforts that are being made by the vet-erans from the Hoosier city. Washington, with its overwhelming advantages, would also like to have a yisit from the survivors of the great struggle and the members of the various posts in the city have been discussing the matter

It is rather early in the season to com-mence active operations and no positive steps have as yet been taken by the posts as a body, but from the tenor of the remarks, brought out by the ques-tions of a Capric reporter it seems more than likely that the movement will be carried to a satisfactory conclusion. All of the veterans interviewed were favorably inclined and ready to begin the canvass at once. E There is a sentiment all over the country favorable to Wash ington as the meeting place and soon, no doubt, the eyes of the old residents will be greeted again with the sight of the tattered battle flags of the men who wore the blue. Inny of the veterans who will march down the Avenue were here a quarter of a century ago on their way to win laurels on the battle delts of the Old Dominion. They were young and strong then, the banners were bright and new, but twenty-five years will have rung its changes on both, and the picture will be quite different from that of the early days of the

WHAT COMMANDER LINCOLN SAYS. Commander C. P. Lincoln, when asked what he thought of the movement, said:

"It is rather early yet to commence making arrangements, but there has been a good deal of discussion among the members of the organization con-cerning it. I believe had the matter been agitated, Washington would have been the meeting place the present year instead of Milwaukee, where it will be held. Something was said about it duling the last encampment, but it is a big contract and there is lots of work. As no conference had been held among the comrades I did not feel called upor to encourage the movement. Washington is the place of all others to hold the encampment at," he continued,

Thousands of our members were mustered out of the service here, and the great majority stopped a day or two en route to the field. We are all getting old now and are dropping off fast and there are but few who would not be glad to visit once again the scenes of twenty-five years ago. The nearness of many of the famous battlefields has much to commend the city as a place of meeting, as daily excursions may be gotten up and add much to the pleasure of the comrades. I have no doubt that when an appeal is made to Congress and the citizens of the District they will respond nobly, and there will be but little trouble experienced in raising the amount sufficient to entertain them

Commander-elect W. S. Odell was next seen regarding the matter. He is one of the officers recently elected, and ie House agreed to that portion of the solution directing the conferress so amend the bill as to rovide for the admission of South b so amend the bill as to brovide for the admission of South lakota under the Sioux Falls constitu-on by proclamation of the President ithout a new vote being taken on the uestion of division. By a vote of 144 100 the House tabled the motion to consider. The remaining instruction lative to the admission of North ments could be made to make Wash. ington the meeting place, and it is to be hoped that the movement will be a suc-cess. It will all depend, however, upon the liberality of Congress and our citithe internity of Congress and our citi-zens, for the posts here are poor, and can do but little in a financial way. The Legislature of Wisconsin appropriated $50,000, and as much more was raised by private subscription for the enter-tainment of the companies. The by private subscription for the enter-tainment of the comrades. The entire city is taking an interest in it and con-tributing to its success. To show you one example: You know Milwankee is a great place for beer. Well, a large brewer there is going to run a pipe from his brewery to our hall, with faucets at intervals, and everybody may helo intervals, and everybody may help themselves. It is this kind of practical interest that makes the affair a suc

OTHERS WHO PAVOR IT. Adjutant-General Ingram also spoke in favorable terms of the movement, as did all of the post commanders interviewed. The rank and file of the G. viewed. The rank and file of the G. A. R. are anxious for the movement to take definite shape, and have the liveliest interest in all that pertains to it. Captain George E. Lemon of the National Tribine said that Washington could not be rivalled as a place for holding the encampment. Her hotel accommodations were ample, the streets were unsurpassed for the handling of large bodies of men and either the National Theatre or Albaugh's Operational Theatre or Albaugh's Opera House would be large enough for hold ing the meetings.

The reporter next approached a prominent business man who is also an old soldier, for the purpose of finding out the advantages that would accrue to the city by a visit of the organization.
"It is to the interest of every business man in Washington," he said, "to encourage any movement that will bring a crowd to the city. Washington de-pends a great deal upon strangers for business and no doubt all of the merchants and hotel-keepers would respond to a call for subscriptions."

"The encar ment of the G. A. R. usually brings about 50,000 people to a town, but to Washington it would bring a greaf many more if the railroads will act half decent, and I suppose they will. The presence of so pose they will. The presence of so many visitors in the city means the spending of money, and a great deal of it. spending of money, and a great deal of it.
At the very lowest estimate they will spend a dollar and a half every day, and this means something like $75,000 each day. Congress will no doubt appropriate a good round sum. This is a part of the scheme as I understand it.
The intention of its promoters is to get The intention of its promoters is to get the posts all over the country to bring pressure to bear upon their Representative and get him to vote for a bill which will be introduced in Congress. The coming President being an old soldier himself, and, I think, a G. A. R. man at that, will doubtless sign it. And, by the bya, the presence of General Harrison at the White House will, I am sure,

THE MEVERLING TRACEDY.

New Youx, Feb. 14.-A special from Henry Labouchere of London says: have not got to the bottom of the Meyorling tragedy. I do not believe in the authenticity of the letters which have appeared in the papers as coming from Archduke Rudolf and Baroness Marie Vescera, stating their intention to five no longer. These letters seem to me to be of a piece with all the stories told by the orders of the Emperor between the occurrence of the tragedy and the fune-ral of Prince Rudolf.

ral of Prince Rudolf.

Before there was time to concoct a good circumstantial account that would liold well together, the official people blurted out that Crown Prince Rudolf lind been shot behind the cay in a diagonal direction, and that the coronal part of the skull had been carried of part of the skull had been carried of by the bullet as it went out of the head. Nothing at all was said of Baroness Marie Vecsera. We might fancy that it was she who discharged the pistol if she had not been shot in the back. Both were found dead on the same couch and there were flowers scattered on the body of Marie.

Does not this point to a woman's hand—to that of a maniae, from inclusion.

Hoes not this point to a woman's hand to that of a maniac from jealonsy, and to supreme and feminine from in re-venge? The diagonal shot upward also points at somebody having been con-cealed in the room, under the bed or table, or some other piece of furniture, and to creeping along stealthily until he or she got up to the sleeping pair, and to placing the muzzle of the pistol close to Rudolf's head and dring up at it.

Marie would doubtless on hearing the shot have sought to escape, when she was knocked over by a pistol shot in the back. There were mutilations also of both bodies, which showed a manifest held to prevent a worse scandal than that which has been stirring the world for the last fortnight.

The letters announcing suicidal intent have, as it was pointed out by me, been overdone. Why, of all persons in the world, should Crown Prince Radolf have written on this subject to the Duke of Braganza, with whom he was but slightly acquainted, and who lives at Lisbon like a bon bourgeois? If the Duke of Braganza had lived only within a stone's throw of the Hofburg. one might well understand the curt mis-sive in which Rudoff; after announcing his intention, wishes him good evening. Some imagine that the shots have been fired by the brother of the young princess, others by a gamekeeper; and then there is a theory of an illustrious personage having lain in ambush under the table until the lovers were asleep. But the curious thing is that every one out of England thinks it all right that heir apparent to the dual empire ould have been shot because he was en bonne fortune. The tendency on the continent is to keep down gallantry by granting impunity to kill those who are

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 14 .- The Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, 300 strong, and representing all sections of the State, assembled yester-day in Young Mannachor Hall and united its many voices in a vigorous protest against the submission of the prohibitory amendment of the State Constitution to a popular vote. The meeting was presided over by President Theodore F. Straub of Allegheny, who made a vigorous speech on the rights of liquor dealers, giving in brief the plans to be pursued in the coming battle against orphibition.

The committee visited the headquarters at Paterson and found a deficiency in the accounts of $3.041.81. CRICAGO, Feb. 14.—Police Inspector John Bonfield, who was suspended from duty by the Mayor some days since pending an investigation of the charges brought against him by the Chicago Times, handed his resignation to Mayor Roche yesterday in a caustic letter, saying among other things, that the Mayor's political advisors had, previous to his suspension, assured him (Bon, field) that his continuance in office would incur the opposition of the Anarchists, Socialists, lottery men and gamblers to Mayor Roche's re-election, but that if he would voluntarily ask to be relieved from duty that he would be reinstated immediately after the elec-

SAMMY HICKS.

Hicks' store was one of the old landmarks of Burr Oak Ridge. For many years it had stood at the cross roads, a very common, cheap frame affair at its st, and to which age and weather had lent many marks of decay. The build ing was small, and its unpainted sides were time-stained and brown. Even the little sign, "Hicks" Store," printed in rude, sprawling letters over the door, had grown dim and almost filegible.

Only a few of the gray-haired inhabiants could remember the day when Bart Hicks came to the new settlement on the ridge and opened the little store at the cross-roads. As for the younger generations, they had always heard and known of Bart Hicks and his store.

Hicks, like his store, showed the ray ages of time. He had grown old and gray and his once proud, erect form was bent under the weight of years and the troubles and sorrows they brought Away back, twenty years before this Away back, twenty years octors this story opens, a son was born to Bart Hicks—a laughing, cooing, blue-eyed boy, and they called him Sammy. The father was proud of the boy, and loved him after a fachiou, not as a father should love an only child, but, as well as his according to the same of th as his grasping nature would permit.

Sammy developed into a fine, bright lad, as unlike his father as a child could be . He possessed a disposition like that of his mother—pleasant, placid and generous. In addition, he was ambi-tious and had longings to know some-thing of the great world outside of Bur-Oak Blakes and sometimes he felt Oak Ridge, and sometimes he felt a strong desire to live a different sort of strong desire to live a different sort of life frem that which he had always known. He had seen and read enough of the world to convince him that, how-ever important Hicks' store and Burr Oak Ridge were to the Ridge people, they were in reality a very small part of the world. Sammy longed for an education, but his father refused to aid him in obtaining it, so he was com-pelled to content himself with the little knowledge he could gather from the few straggling books he was able to pick up here and there, and with the

One day the patient and long suffering wife and mother took down sick, and as the days passed she grew rapidly worse, and one evening she sent for Hicks at the store. As the customers bad all gone away and it was closing time, Hicks put up the warped shutters and bolted them in place, and closed and locked the door and walked up to

What is it, Lindy?" he asked, coming and bending over her.

she said, in a voice that startled him by its strangeness and weakness. "I am

"Lindy! Lindy!" Hicks said, and his voice was choked and husky. 'You must not talk that way. You must not think of goin'. Think o' gittia' well, Lindy, an' you'll git over it. You mustn't die now; it's too sudden.

you, Bartlett, before I go. I want you to be good to Sammy. That's all I ask.
Be good to any boy." good to my boy." I will," Hicks said, bowing his head, and, for the time, no doubt, feeling the force of his neglect of his son. A little later Melinda Hicks died, and the father and son were left to mourn her absence. The one mourned her death because he valued her and misself her aid and assistance in the grosser duties of life. The other mourned her death because he loved her and missed for gentle presence and kindly acts. The husband and the son, each in his way, and each for his own, reasons mourned the loss of the wife and mother.

She wrought on Hicks' mind till he forgot his promise to Sammy's mother, and soon the boy found his lot a cruel one, and his existence miserable in the extreme, and at last he made up his mind that he could submit to it no longer.

So one day Sammy went away from the old home, lot to his fortuna amount. and unsympathetic, and without cause

Many more years passed by, bringing with them their many changes to the world and the people in it. Burr Oak Ridge had felt these changes. New homes were built, and new owners and occupants had come to many of the old occupants had come to many of the old ones. The old faces, many of them, had disappeared. Some had moved away and others had gone off in that long sleep of which we know nothing. A new generation had sprung up, and new customers came to Hicks store. But Hicks' store remained the same, only its rough brown sides may have been a little more weatherheaten, the old window-shutters a little more warped, the old sign a little more din, and the dust on the shelves a little thicker.

thicker. But Hicks was changed. He was not only grayer and feebler, but the weight of a great sorrow rested heavily on him. He was alone in the world now, with none to love or care for him; with not a soul to mingle consolation with his sorrows, to sweeten his troubles with an rows, to sweeten his troubles with an offering of pity. His second wife was dead, and age and solitude brought up the past with its dark pictures to haunt him. Business had lost its charm, and there was no longer a pleasure in accumulating money. The old store in which he had taken such pride and found so much pleasure for years at found so much pleasure for years, at last lost its fascination and become hateful to him, and often he longed to tear away from it and leave it forever. One summer evening Hicks sat on a pine box in front of the store, and his thoughts went back to the old, old times-back down the channel of time times—back down the channel of time to the years when Sammy was with him, and as his eyes grew dim with gathering tears, he mused:

friendless. There is no one to share my fortune or my trouble. No one to care for me while I live, or weep for me when I die. It is terrible, terrible, this being so alone in the world.'

Musing thus, Hicks sat for a long time, with his face buried in his hands. It was beginning to get dark when he awoke to the fact that it was time to put up the shutters and lock up the store for the night. Arising, he looked down the long lane to make sure that no late customer was coming, when he caught a glimpse of the approaching figure of a boy.

It's been a long time since the news came of him dyin', in California, but they don't believe it, ut just keep on expectin' of him. In the meantime the boy approached, and the old man, becoming so intensely absorbed in his thoughts, had forgotten him. He was a tall lad, poorly dressed, but with an air of complete inde-

"Good evening," he said, coming up close and placing one foot on the plat-

The old man gave a start on being thus suddenly disturbed, and, quickly glancing up, looked for a moment on the face before him and the color all went out of his own and he sank back went out of his own and he sank back without a werd, although his lips moved and he tried to speak. The boy did not notice this, for he had caught sight of the faded sign overhead and was engaged in trying to make it out in the gathering shades of night. In a little while the old man recovered, and he waked.

"Boy, what's your name?"
"San, Hicke. That was my father's name, too, and he was your son."
"Yes, yes," the old man said, rising with a great effort and steadying himself against the building. "I thought so. I can see it in your face. You

"No; I heard them talking of that but it was atmistake. It was my father who was killed." "My boy killed." the old man ex-claimed, "and it is thus I have kept my promise to Lindy. It was I that drove him away, and I that killed him! Poor,

"Held on!" Hicks cried, tottering down the road to where the boy was standing. "What are you going away

"Don't go, don't go, child,"he pleaded, and his voice was so weak and faltering that it touched the boy's heart and awoke the deepest sympathy. "Don't go away and leave me, for I'm so lone-some and sad. I treated your father mean, but if you will stay and cheer me up with your presence I will tive a different life." I know that I've done wrong, but I've suffered for it. Don't leave me. I can't spare you. I won't ive me. I can't spare you. I won' et von go.

Sammy could not refuse the heart-broken old man's request, and the few years that they remained together were happy ones to Sammy, and through the old man's sorrows there came many streaks of bright sunshine to break the gloom of his sad life.— Akron Tele-

> Ludies, we respectfully call your attention to the following

FIVE FACTS:

THE DURABILITY of the finish and color are marvelous, one bottle going as far as two or three of other brands. It is compounded with all, and gives an old shoe the appearance of a new one, and preserves it at the same time.

W STOY Its gloss.

THE PRICE IS ONLY 25 CENTS, and, as commy is wealth, we refll the bottles for 15 cents. Chalk will remove it from the hands.
